Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: . . . of secondary education, then they are excellent as a basis for college work. From the tendency of our institutions we must believe that more and more win the high schools become feederB of the colleges. The interests of colleges and high schools will be greatly enhanced by the cloeest union, and one impjrtant result will bo an increase in the number who will seek higher education. There is one great advantage in postioning to as late a day as possible the necessity of decision regarding a college course. Whenever a boy decides to go to college ho should find himself on tho road thither. Already Michigan University and the University of California admit to a four year: general course without any foreign language, while Northwestern University admits students with only one foreign language, ancient or modern. The State universities, we think, can afford to meet the regular work of the high schools. It is understood that there are some troublesome adjustments arising ffrom the union of classical and English students in college classes. In large colleges the problem is not serious, because classes are divided. In smaller institutions a list of electives will make the necessary adjustment possible. Even in an inflexible course some substitutions are possible, as solid geometry and piano trigonometry for freshman mathematics. This phase of the problem, however, is not the most cerious one. We will proceed to suggest a high-school course that might be generally adopted. We include it in the...
